Ana followed the bird deeper into the forest, and soon she came to a clearing. In the middle of the clearing was a large tree, and on the branches of the tree were hundreds of birds. The birds were all singing different songs, and the air was filled with their beautiful music.

Ana sat down on the ground and listened to the birds sing. She closed her eyes and let the music wash over her. She felt happy and peaceful, and she wished that she could stay in the forest forever.

But then, Ana heard a noise. She opened her eyes and saw a group of men approaching. The men were carrying axes, and they were heading towards the tree where the birds were singing.

Ana knew that the men were going to cut down the tree, and she couldn't let that happen. She stood up and ran towards the men.

"Stop!" she cried. "Don't cut down the tree!"

The men stopped and looked at Ana.

"Why not?" one of the men asked.

"Because the birds live in the tree," Ana said. "If you cut it down, they'll have nowhere to go."

The men looked at each other, and then they nodded.

"You're right," one of the men said. "We won't cut down the tree."

Ana smiled. She was so happy that she had been able to save the tree and the birds.
